Catholic Education in Bay Area Documented

The Regional Oral History Office of the University of California's Bancroft Library announces the availability of an interview entitled "A Native Daughter's Leadership in Education: College of Notre Dame, Belmont, California, 1956-1980" with Sister Catharine Julie Cunningham, S.N.D., retired president and current chancellor of the College.

Catharine Julie Cunningham was born in 1910 to a prominent Catholic family in San Francisco. After graduating from the University of California in 1932, she joined the Sisters of Notre Dame de Namur at Belmont. Overview of Archival Center Holdings, Archdiocese of Los Angeles

The archives for the Archdiocese of Los Angeles, established in 1927, were formally inaugurated for research purposes in 1962, by James Francis Cardinal McIntyre. Initially located in the new wing added to the northeastern end of the Chancery Office in downtown Los Angeles, they were relocated in permanent quarters on the grounds of San Fernando Mission in 1981. The first independent archival facility erected under diocesan auspices in the United States, the Archival Center was dedicated by Timothy Cardinal Manning as the major participation by the Catholic church in the bicentennial celebration of El Pueblo de Nuestra Senora de los Angeles.

The Archdiocese of Los Angeles traces its origins to Pope Gregory XVI and the creation of the Diocese of Both Californias in 1840. Manuscripts, documents, letters and related primary materials from that time comprise the core collection in the Archival Center.

In addition to several hundred thousand transcripts and mission registers predating the episcopal era, the Archival Center has upward of 350,000 separate items pertaining to events occurring in the years after the appointment of Fray Francisco Garcia Diego y Moreno as California's first bishop.

All letters and most other historical data prior to 1913 have been catalogued and are available to researchers. The period between 1903 and 1915 has been cross-filed and efforts are now underway to open the papers of the John J. Cantwell era through 1947. Sister Miriam Ann Cunningham is providing that service. The largest single block of materials in the collection is that pertaining to the 281 parishes served by the three county Archdiocese of Los Angeles, the largest juridical unit in the United States.

In addition to primary sources, the Archival Center is rich in "associated items" such as The Tidings, the official Catholic newspaper for California's southland which has been published since 1896. The Archival Center has the entire run on film and the issues themselves from 1903 onwards. Also available are the files of The Monitor (1861–1964), as well as a number of individual bound volumes of that northern California Catholic newspaper. There are other newspapers in the collection for which a checklist is available.

Related printed materials, such as parochial histories, annuals, brochures, directories, reports, relations, periodicals and offprints are in generous supply, as are ledgers, diaries, daybooks, sermons, journals, dissertations, and microfilm. Several dozen scrapbooks further enhance the collection, some of them dating from the turn of the century. There are also twenty-five bound volumes of primary correspondence and documentation on the taxation of Catholic schools in California (1919–1951), most of it never exploited for research purposes.

The 7,500 volume library housed on the ground floor specializes in such fields as California, American Catholic, bibliography, archiology, travel accounts, Western Americana journals, Islandic imprints, and assorted finding and research devices. The Friends of the Archives provide funds with which to keep the printed volumes updated.

Retired materials are constantly being transferred from the Chancery Office. In recent times several significant acquisitions have been made and others are anticipated, all of them geared to augmenting the historical relevance of the Archival Center's core collection. Some examples might be a collection of 330 copy-flo and microprint letters stretching from 1850 to 1877 used by Father John McGloin in his four volumes dealing with various facets of Western American history, Christie Phillips' complete collection of Vatican City stamps (1929-1985), a series of historically valuable broadsides, including the one issued by Mexican Secretary of Justice and Ecclesiastical Affairs on September 22, 1836 calling for creation of a diocese in the Californias and its endowment by the Pious Fund. Another acquisition characteristic of those sought is a document conveying Archbishop Joseph Sadoc Alemany's power-of-attorney to John Thomas Doyle in the legal contest with the United States over ownership of the lands claimed by the Catholic Church in California.

There are no restrictions to the use of the catalogued papers, except for "sensitive materials" and, in that case, the Roman rule of "fifty years or until all parties to the issues are deceased," is invoked. Those wishing to use the Archival Center are expected to make an appointment in advance.

At the time the archival program for the Archdiocese of Los Angeles was begun, provisions were also made for collecting historical mementos and souvenirs related to California Catholic heritage. A number of display cases were acquired and over the succeeding years a rather sizable assortment of historical artifacts was assembled and exhibited. On numerous occasions the collection was moved around the southland, from college to college, museum to museum. As an historical "reach-out," the program was immensely successful in acquainting youngsters and older students with a love for their heritage.

When plans for the new Archival Center were being formulated, space was provided for an Historical Museum with sixteen modern display areas. During the course of the years, the various exhibits are changed or otherwise renewed. Several times each week, Las Damas Archivistas, a docent group founded by Marie Walsh Harrington, opens the Historical Museum to visitors. The register book indicates that since its first year of operation the collection has accommodated over 20,000 visitors.

The Archival Center is envisioned as occupying a vital role in the ongoing challenge of keeping the local Church abreast with modern demands and deeds, some of which are not only new, but totally unprecedented in ecclesiastical annals. While there is much wrong with modern times ... there is more that could be right if people would only take time to look at the record, make creative interpretations, and then arrive at reasoned conclusions. This they can do only by going to the documents.

The Archives of the Archdiocese of San Antonio

The National Conference of Catholic Bishops' 1974 Document on Ecclesiastical Archives culminated in a national interest on the part of American Bishops to organize diocesan archives. The Most Reverend Francis J.
Furey, former Archbishop of San Antonio, founded the Archives of the Archdiocese of San Antonio in 1974.

By the end of 1977, the Archives had published a preliminary inventory listing the major record groups from 1874-1940. Recently, the Archives have completed a descriptive inventory of the numerous groups, sub-groups and record series which make up the collection through 1969. Since diocesan archives experience a growing process, the arrangement in the archives folows the tenure of each Archbishop, thus allowing for the easy up-dating of existing guides.

Two major sections of significant historical importance and rich research value were selected to be described in this article: The Sacramental Records of San Fernando Cathedral (1703-1825) and the Records of the Bishops and Archbishops of San Antonio (1874-1969).

SACRAMENTAL RECORDS: The Archives of the Archdiocese of San Antonio retain a microfilm collection of parish sacramental records through 1975 totaling 286 reels, and a card index containing over one million baptismal entries.

(Records less than 100 years old are restricted from public viewing.)

Even though the parish sacramental registers have been microfilmed, the original books are kept in the parish rectories with the exception of 21 volumes from the Historical Collection of San Fernando Cathedral which are deposited in the archives. The Cathedral Collection, the most unique and perhaps the most valuable in the Chancery archives, spans the years from 1703-1825 starting with the evangelization of the Texas Indians by the Spanish missionaries and continuing through the secularization of the missions in 1825.

This set of 21 volumes written in 17th century Spanish, has been singled out by scholars and historians to be one of the best primary sources available in Texas for the study of social and cultural attitudes of the Texas community during colonial times. The rec-cords offer genealogical information of early settlers and outstanding people in Texas history. Also in this collection are the records of the "Compania Volante de San Carlos del Alamo" consisting primarily of marriage applications of the military companies stationed at the Alamo and furnish a direct insight into the procedures followed by Spanish military personnel prior to the act of matrimony. Two Libros de Gobierno of the Church of San Fernando, containing papal and royal orders and some of the edicts of the Inquisition, considered to be the only manuscripts of their nature known to exist in Texas today, complete this interesting collection.

BISHOPS AND ARCHBISHOPS PAPERS: The Diocese of San Antonio was separated from the diocese of Texas (Galveston-Houston) in 1874 and was elevated to an Archdiocese in 1926. This section consists of the papers generated by the bishops of San Antonio and the auxiliary bishops as well. There is little documentation in the archives supporting the administration of Bishop Dominic Pellicer, first bishop of San Antonio (1874-1881). This deficiency might very well be due to a lack of clerical assistance in the first chancery office. From 1881 on, the papers of the bishops become more numerous, yet limited by and large to correspondence with their priests regarding pastoral obligations and appointments. In 1911 with the beginning of the Shaw Administration, a more sophisticated management of church records is evident with the first grouping or series beginning to form part of what later became a voluminous central file system. The papers of Bishop John W. Shaw (1911-1918) include: the reopening of the San Antonio missions as parish churches, the creation of the Diocese of El Paso partially from San Antonio's territory, the impact of World War I on travel and mailing procedures, the need for American Service chaplains abroad, and the relocation of European clergy in America. Bishop Shaw's papers cover in part the exodus of Mexican priests to Texas during the beginning of the Mexican revolution and later during President Calles' persecution of the Catholic Church in Mexico, which are better described in the papers of his successor, Archbishop Arthur J. Drossaerts, (1919-1940). San Antonio was elevated to an archdiocese in 1926, and Drossaerts became its first Archbishop. His correspondence documents the years of the Great Depression and the archdiocesan growth during his tenure, represented by an addition of over sixty new churches and fifty parochial schools. This documentation is of particular importance because of the social changes that were taking place due to the Great Depression and the presence of Revolutionary anti-clericalism in neighboring Mexico.

Archbishop Lucey (1941-1969) came to San Antonio in 1941 and governed the Archdiocese through 1969. His collection contains a great diversity of records representative of a wide range of activity. Archbishop Lucey's papers are by far the most voluminous in the episcopal section of the Archives. A great deal of his collection consists of correspondence generated by his work with Confraternity of Christian Doctrine (CELAM), Latin American Bishops Conference, the Bishops' Committee for the Spanish Speaking, Catholic Action, and organized labor in Texas. The Archbishop's voluminous addresses, sermons and speeches, personal correspondence, some diaries, and the transcripts of his radio program "St. Anthony's Hour," together with three large photo albums, 12 scrapbooks of newspaper clippings, and extensive miscellaneous correspondence dating from his years in Los Angeles are also part of his collection. Additionally, there are transcripts of interviews with the Archbishop and some of his priests conducted by historians and biographers. The Archbishop's ever-present concern with social justice problems, racism, equal employment opportunities, the integration of Catholic schools, labor disputes, and a diversity of liberal causes are well represented in this sizeable collection. In 1969, after a year of personnel dissension Archbishop Lucey retired.

The Archives of the Archdiocese of San Antonio are located in the first floor of the Chancery Office, 2718 Woodlawn, San Antonio, TX 78228. The Archives are open daily from 8-4. Visitors are required to make an appointment in advance. The records are open for reviewing through 1940, however, serious researchers may obtain access to more recent records by writing to the Chancellor, Msgr. Patrick J. Murray, P.O. Box 28410, San Antonio, TX 78228.
